Five Years On: How Actuarial Careers and Work Environments Are Changing

Today, we have reason to celebrate – and to become a little nostalgic: Five years ago, in March 2021, we published the first edition of the actupool Career Newsletter. Back then, the world was still in the tight grip of the pandemic, so it came as no surprise that we chose “COVID-19 – Impact on the Work of Actuaries” as our title. For those who would like to revisit it, the full newsletter is available here.

A lot has happened since then; today, other global developments, particularly political ones, are keeping the world on edge. Actuarial workforce trends and work environments have evolved significantly as well. Against this backdrop, our first article looks at how actuarial work environments have changed: while the pandemic shaped the working world back then, what defines actuarial workplaces today?

In addition, alongside an outlook for the workforce of the near future, we highlight a practical example of a current career opportunity for young actuaries. This also serves as an example of actupool’s own development over the past five years, from a specialised actuarial job board to an international career and networking platform. In particular, this refers to the highly successful second Career Day of the Young Actuaries Initiative, held at the beginning of last week, which actupool was pleased to help organise.
